Fall Christian Education Program

It is that time of year when we get back to a regular routine following the summer months. I hope everyone had an enjoyable summer season? School classes have begun and the parish returns to a two-service worship schedule. Fairly soon, the weather will begin to get cooler. This is a season for change and a new beginning.

I want to introduce to you our Fall Christian Education program, commencing Sunday, September 9. This program is offered for both the adults and children of the parish family, as well as for our guests. Please note two points: first, Adult Christian Education will take place in Garland Hall, while the Children's program, ages 3-12, will be held in the parish hall classrooms. Second, the two programs will be conducted at different times on Sunday mornings.

Adult Education Program

The Adult program will begin Sunday, September 9, at 9:00 a.m., in Garland Hall. Each session will last between 45 minutes to one hour of time. This first curriculum of the adult fall program is a six-week video study series, Moses: In the Footsteps of the Reluctant Prophet, with Adam Hamilton. Pastor Hamilton is a master at explaining questions of faith in a down-to-earth fashion. In this particular series, he explores the sites of Moses' life from the Nile River to the Reed Sea (a portion of the Red Sea), from Mt. Sinai to the desert wilderness.

With the use of historical information, archaeological data, and biblical texts, Hamilton guides us in the footsteps of this reluctant prophet who blazed a trail of faith. Activities, Bible study, and discussion follow each video presentation.

Weekly presentations are:

Sept. 9: The Birth of Moses

Sept. 16: Two Moments That Defined the Man

Sept. 23: The Exodus

Sept. 30: The Ten Commandments

Oct. 7: Lessons from the Wilderness

Oct. 14: Don't Forget. . . Pass It On

Children's Education Program

I am happy that the Children's program will introduce a new curriculum this year, Godly Play. I refer you to the subsequent article in this newsletter from Janeil Rey, Director of Christian Education, for information about this series. The Children's program will begin Sunday, September 9, at 10:30 a.m., in the classrooms of the Parish Hall. Each session will begin with everyone gathered for Children's Chapel, followed with various components of the Godly Play lesson. Audrey Parker will join with Janeil Rey in teaching this series.

Mid-Week Worship Schedule

Beginning in the month of September, the following mid-week worship services will be offered.

Holy Communion in the Quire: a contemplative service at 10:00 a.m., held on the First and Third Wednesdays of each month. (Sept. 5 and 19)

Holy Communion, with the Anointing of the Sick: an evening liturgy of healing for the mind, body, or spirit. This service will be held at 5:30 p.m. on the Third Thursday of each month. (Sept. 20)

Fredonia Place: Holy Communion in the Garden Room, 2:00 p.m., second Tuesday of the month. (Sept. 11)

Blessings, Fr. Jim

New Sunday School Curriculum: Godly Play

Godly Play is a Christian education program designed to help children explore the mysteries of their relationship with God. It is based on the educational theories of Marie Montessori and the work of Dr. Sophia Cavaletti, an Italian theologian. The Rev. Dr. Jerome Berryman an educator, author and Episcopal theologian developed Godly Play as a curriculum of spiritual practice for children. Godly Play helps children learn the stories of scripture, the people of the Bible, the sacraments of the Church and the nature of God through experiencing a sacred space, listening to stories, and enacting the lessons shared.

The Trinity Church Sunday School is in the process of adopting this curricular approach for the upcoming Church year. In preparation, we are redesigning the main nursery room to create the sacred space. We will be keeping the Children's Altar as our focal point and adding a story telling circle and child sized shelves to make the play things associated with the stories readily accessible for the children. We will still begin with our traditional children's service followed by circle story time, where children will hear Bible stories and enact them with the wooden and cloth toys available. Following circle time the older children will work with Mrs. Parker on extension lessons related to the story and the younger children will work in the nursery on crafts and expanded play related to the story.

Below are the tenets of Godly Play:

Godly Play is a creative, imaginative approach to Christian formation and spiritual guidance.

Godly Play has a foundation of 40+ years of research and practice.

Godly Play values process, openness, discovery, community and relationships.

Godly Play models the worship life, stories, symbols and rituals of Christian congregations.

Godly Play allows practitioners to make relevant and personal theological meaning.

Godly Play nurtures participants to larger dimensions of belief and faith through wondering and play.

Godly Play aims to have children become fluent in the language of Christianity before adolescence. The curriculum is divided into three age groups with a different focus on understanding the language of the Church, the Bible, and God. For 3 to 6 year olds, the focus is on hearing the language. For 6 to 9 year olds the focus is on speaking the language and for 9 through 12 year olds, the focus is on thinking about the language of Christianity. Godly Play was founded in the U.S. and is practiced in all 50 states with associations in countries around the world. More information about Godly Play can be found here:

<http://www.godlyplayfoundation.org/>

<http://www.youtube.com/user/GodlyPlayFndn>

One of the basic philosophies of the Montessori Method adopted by Godly Play is that children interact with beautiful materials made of polished wood, fabric, and items from nature. To help us prepare for this transition, we welcome donations of natural colored wicker baskets and small wooden boxes, donations of plain (not patterned) fabric and wooden figures that could be used in bible stories, such as animals, boats, wagons, people, buildings. We are also in need of a wooden nativity scene, wooden crosses, and wooden depictions of Jesus.

Thank you for your support as we make this important transition in our Sunday School. Please ask the children about the stories they've heard and come to see our transformed space.

Northwestern Pennsylvania and Western New York ponder sharing one bishop, one staff, one mission

*Episcopal News Service website:
August 16, 2018*

The “least likely” friendship in the House of Bishops between the Episcopal Church’s oldest active diocesan bishop and its youngest has fostered a first-of-its-kind collaborative experiment that could point to the future shape and feel of dioceses.

Western New York Bishop William Franklin, 71, recently told the House of Bishops that he and Northwestern Pennsylvania Bishop Sean Rowe were the “least likely of friends.” Franklin called himself “an Anglo-Catholic church historian.” He holds a doctorate in church history from Harvard University and was dean of Berkeley Divinity School at Yale University. He has served the Diocese of Western New York for seven years. Rowe, 43, has been bishop of Northwestern Pennsylvania for 11 years. He holds a doctorate in organizational development from Gannon University. Franklin called him a “very low church expert in adaptive change.”

However, Rowe said, they “took an idea that came out of friendship” and a common concern for the mission of the church and have been collaborating in new ways. When Franklin and Rowe explained their experiment to the House of Bishops on July 13, General Convention’s closing day, Rowe said that the Great Lakes region is in “an adaptive moment” and that the church ought to be part of that moment by trying a new model that could free up more resources for ministry by eliminating duplication in administrative costs. For the past five years, Episcopalians in the Dioceses of Western New York and Northwestern Pennsylvania have been sharing certain operations.

They have a joint formation process for deacons and a shared board to examine chaplains for the ordination process, and they have held some joint clergy conferences. The dioceses have just started sharing transition ministry functions, and a Northwestern Pennsylvania diocesan staff member is now the intake officer for disciplinary matters in Western New York.

The next step will come Oct. 26-27 when the two dioceses hold a joint convention in Niagara Falls,

New York. At that gathering, Western New York will vote on whether to make Rowe its bishop provisional for five years. Rowe has served as bishop provisional of the Diocese of Bethlehem in Pennsylvania since August 2014 while the diocese had what the standing committee called “a healthy, productive period of reflection and discernment about the mission to which God is calling us” after the retirement of Bishop Paul V. Marshall. Rowe will continue to serve as bishop provisional in Bethlehem until the Sept. 15 consecration of Bishop-elect Kevin D. Nichols. Franklin is due to retire April 2, 2019, a milestone that had a lot to do with the proposal.

How the two dioceses got to this point

In April 2017, when he announced his retirement, Franklin asked his diocesan standing committee to consider calling Rowe as provisional bishop. After talking to both bishops, the standing committees of both dioceses agreed to consider the prospect. The bishops presented the idea to a joint clergy conference in September 2017 when, Rowe told Episcopal News Service, it initially “played to mixed reviews.” Clergy wondered about hidden agendas, and some wished the plan were more fleshed out. Rowe and Franklin told them the only agenda was to put the idea to them and “honestly let people be part of planning it.” There was enough of a consensus to have a small group of people from both dioceses meet to think the idea all the way through.

The results of that process went to both diocesan conventions last October, and both agreed to keep moving forward. More than 500 people in both dioceses came to eight listening sessions last winter to discuss the proposal with its pledge to enhance the collaboration between the two dioceses. In May, the standing committees of the two dioceses unanimously voted to support the idea. If the Western New York convention elects Rowe on Oct. 26, the collaboration would be just that and not a merger of dioceses. A merger would require the consent of General Convention, and right now neither diocese wants to lose its identity, the two bishops told ENS.

“We’ve never used the word merger,” Franklin said in an interview. “It’s a proposal to have one bishop for two dioceses, and for five years have a provisional bishop.” Rowe said the experiment “is being driven by a real call to mission and being a missional church and to try to experiment.”

“The only way we’re going to know if these models work is to try them, so it’s a risk. This is not being driven by finances or trying to drive success,” he said. “This is us asking, ‘What do we think is the next best step, given where we are?’ And we’re going to experiment with it. There’s too much conversation about these things in the church and not enough implementation, and this is a big step.

We don’t know if it will work.” James Isaac, chair of the Western New York Standing Committee, told ENS that his attitude is “why not give it a try.” “The pooled energy of ministry of both the clergy between Western New York and Northwestern Pennsylvania and the strength of the laity has huge potential,” he said. Rowe and Franklin met at Kanuga Conference and Retreat Center in 2015. “We realized that we had a very similar vision of the church,” Franklin said. “Even though I’m a historian, I’m pretty radical about wanting to do different things.”⁶

Just don’t call it the Rust Belt

What they have in common is a love of their neighboring dioceses, which are in a part of the United States that has undergone a massive economic downturn. Lake Erie forms the dioceses’ eastern boundaries. Western New York, with headquarters in suburban Buffalo, comprises 57 parishes in New York located between the borders of Pennsylvania and Canada. Northwestern Pennsylvania, with headquarters in Erie, is composed of 33 congregations.

The presence of coal, inland waterways and a ready labor force once made the area a manufacturing center with steel mills at its core. But those mills eventually became outdated, and as the American automobile industry declined, jobs were lost. Wages stagnated. People left. The area became known as the Rust Belt, but that moniker is not a happy one for many of its residents. When the two bishops and others set up a website for their effort and called it “Rust Belt Episcopal,” they got a lot of pushback. “It makes my people angry,” Franklin said.

However, redevelopment is happening in cities in both dioceses. “Both areas have seen the worst, and they’re coming back in a different form,” Isaac said, adding that it is not outlandish to use the word “resurrected” when talking about Buffalo and Erie. “We’re trying to do church in a way that allows the Episcopal Church to survive and flourish in an area where we’ve had challenges – demographic and cultural challenges,” Franklin said. Rowe agrees.

“This is not a move to save an institution. This is not about diocesan viability. In fact, I don’t like that word,” he told the House of Bishops. “Even the smallest of places might be viable. What this is about is what’s best for the mission of the church in our region and the mission of God.”

Rowe told ENS that he and Franklin talked often about the long-term future of the church in a region like theirs. “We put everything on the table, and we said we want a missional church and we want what’s best for the mission of the Gospel,” he said. “What is the best way to do that?”

Working out the details will take time

Eventually, there will be one staff for two dioceses. Rowe will have offices in both Buffalo and Erie, which are about 90 minutes apart, and will make visitations in both dioceses. Elected leaders in both dioceses will exercise their canonical functions, and each diocese will maintain its cathedral. During the first three years of Rowe’s tenure as bishop provisional, the two dioceses plan to explore more deeply their relationship and “develop shared mission priorities”.

“If it’s a complete disaster, we could end it at any time,” Rowe said, but he’s asked people to commit to five years “so that we have a long enough time to try this.” Both bishops and Isaac, the Western New York Standing Committee chair, point to the possible financial efficiencies that could free up more money for mission. There is the possibility, in Rowe’s words, for “a pile of savings.” First off, a bishop search can cost upwards of $200,000, according to those FAQs. Combining diocesan staffs will “increase the staff capacity for the same number of dollars” by allowing for more specialized staff, Rowe said. He doubts any staff members will lose jobs because both staffs anticipate retirements and other pending departures.

If some people do lose their jobs, Rowe said, “we’re going to treat people like a church does. We’re going to be good to people and fair and help people find the next thing.” Franklin, acknowledging that he will be removed from the equation once he retires, hopes that the two dioceses “learn to be a missional church above all, that we cannot do business as usual and that we have to do new things.”

Parish Notes

2017 Parish Financial Audit

Trinity Episcopal is obligated to submit a financial audit report to the diocese each year. The audit is a means of reporting the financial stability of the church to the diocese and demonstrates that the church is able to support itself. All financial entities and groups functioning within the church that collect money and donations are obligated to report to the Audit Committee. The Flower Guild, The Episcopal Church Women, and the Memorial Fund will make reports to the committee. Trinity Masterworks Choir will participate in the 2018 audit.

Reports will outline what money has been collected, what disbursements have been made and any other pertinent information. This is an audit for the year 2017 and will reflect the financial activity of the church for January 1, 2017 through December 31, 2017.

Bill Roberts has graciously agreed to serve as the chair of this committee again. He will be meeting in September with his committee to perform the audit. The Audit Committee report is due to the diocesan office on October 1.

FOLLOWING THE PROGRESS OF OUR WINDOWS

Last month I reported that our oldest stained-glass window, “Alpha and Omega” will need to be re-leaded. During the examination process by Stained Glass Resources it was revealed that all five large wooden frames in the nave and the wooden frame for the “Alpha and Omega” window are beyond repair. Therefore all of these frames will be replaced using the finest Honduran mahogany. Luckily, the wooden frames around the altar windows are in good condition. By the end of October, we should have all of our windows back and looking brand new!

Stained Glass Resources recently sent me this photograph of the top of one lancet that is completely re-leaded. I am sure that everyone can agree, based upon this example, that SGR’s craftsmanship will bring beauty back to our stained-glass windows.
